“ Jim was my ranking supervisor for a few years and I learned he was not one to relish staying in an office at the headquarters. He was fair minded, he was very helpful and he supported those he supervised. That was the image he projected and when he left the company all of us missed him badly.

He often gave much thought to a problem and had the audacity to go outside the box, the comfort zone, to arrive at a solution and that encouraged others to be willing to try something new to achieve success.

I have always appreciated getting to know and work with Jim.

My heart goes out to his family.
