“ Jintana and I knew each other from Amazon, a common connection within my friend group at that time. We were “acting” coaching co-leads during Peak for the same team, although I didn’t get to really know her until later. I’ll never forget meeting up with her in the Target parking lot in Barboursville to give her a few baby things (for Mika) and she just talked at me non-stop for 45 minutes, apologizing the whole time for being too chatty. I had to laugh. Being a mom with an infant, and being at home constantly with only a baby to talk to, really makes you a crazy person. I had just went through it with my son (Abbott, who has recently turned 14!) and knew exactly how she was feeling. I was so sad when we moved to Lexington soon after, because I felt like I had just made such a good friend in Jintana and we were looking forward to having some family get togethers with her and Brandon, and also getting to know Hunter and Mika. I’ll miss the time we never got to have together, friend.

“ For my 30th bday Jintana orchestrated a whole night of celebrating starting with a scavenger hunt. We played leap frog at the bowling alley and laughed so hard. We had so much fun together from work to the beauty school and our daily sushi lunch dates. We talked every day for the last year and im gonna miss our silliness and show watching.

Thank you for all the smiles and laughs but mostly for loving even my messy bits
